Title of Presentation	Integrating Task Based Instruction in EFL Teaching
Abstract	Before, the traditional teaching methodologies have put much focus on teaching grammatical rules. However when it comes to communication, learners were unable to put what has been learnt into practice. In response, recent innovations in EFL teaching have advocated the idea that language instruction should give sufficient emphasis to both grammar and meaning. That is to say combining language form with communication. Among these innovations is Task Based Instruction that is considered a subcategory of communicative language teaching. Task Based Instruction is a language teaching method which focuses on the use of authentic target language in order to accomplish meaningful tasks in real life contexts. Therefore, this research paper is an attempt to investigate the attitudes of Third year EFL students towards the implementation of Task Based Instruction in the university classroom. Additionally, this study attempts to enlighten the teaching learning process through its insightful suggestions and worthwhile future implications. Keywords: communicative language teaching, teaching methodologies, Task Based Instruction,
